CONTRACTOR LIST

As a governmental agency, Jackson Soil & Water Conservation District cannot recommend contractors or companies. We do maintain lists of contractors, but inclusion of a person or company on this list does not constitute a recommendation. Landowners and homeowners are encouraged to learn all they can prior to hiring a contractor or company.

Tips to remember: ***

Get more than one bid: Having several bids on the same project will help you to learn how much material costs, how much different contractors are marking material up, how much labor can cost, etc. Generally, several bids will be approximately the same. If there is a bid much higher or lower than the average, ask the contractor why.

Always ask for referrals: Get a list of jobs the contractor recently completed, and call each of them. Ask the other landowners if they were pleased with the quality of work, honesty, design, and whether the project remained on budget. It is also good to ask for a few referrals from jobs completed a few years ago to determine whether the job has held up as expected.

Don't accept the lowest bid just because it is the lowest: Bids that are significantly lower than others may be lower for several reasons. Is the material of lower quality? Will the final project be on budget? Will you end up paying significantly more than higher bids because the lowest bidder adds other charges? Does the bid cover all the materials and labor you think? Is the contractor paying for insurance and licensing that is required by law? Make sure you know the answer to these questions before you accept the lowest bid.

Ask to see examples of the contractor's work: Always ask to see other projects the contractor has done. This gives you an opportunity to see the work as well as talk to other landowners. Be wary if they are reluctant to show you other jobs or don't have referrals.

Always get a contract: Never hire a contractor to do work without a contract. The contract should specify which work is to be done, material to be used, a project design (if applicable), the project cost, and expected start date. It should also specify the procedure for changes in cost or design.

Put it in writing: Your contract should be in writing. All changes made should also be in writing, specifically outlining the change in design, cost, material, who will do the work or expected completion date.
